Two ladies went into a butcher shop at Ninth street and Troost avenue last evening to buy some liver. At the first mention of the word liver the butcher suddenly, with a frenzied look as of sudden terror, rage or pain, seized his chopper and began to beat it violently with the flat side, against his thigh. The ladies thought the butcher was crazy, and ran screaming out of the place. The butcher retired for a moment, and then returned with the bloody and mangled remains of a dead rat in his hand. The matter was explained when the butcher stated that the rat had entered at the bottom of his pants and had reached his thigh when he made for him with the meat ax. —Kansas City Times.

The prices made on dry goods, clothing, boots and shoes at the Famous are for cash, and lower than any other house in the county.
